He's a Total Wreck—Again!

Break up with laughter when Ralph Breaks the Internet premieres in theaters November 21st.

Location, location, location! We all know it's important when choosing a home, but according to Rich Moore and Phil Johnston, Directors of Ralph Breaks the Internet, it's just as important in creating a story. Because when the beloved one-man wrecking crew leaves Litwak's video arcade to venture into an entirely different location—the Internet—it ultimately changes his perceptions of what friendship means.

When Vanellope's video game, Sugar Rush, needs a replacement part, Ralph (voice of John C. Reilly) and Vanellope (voice of Sarah Silverman) must leave the comfortable, familiar arcade and travel to the World Wide Web. It doesn't take long for the twosome to realize that they are in way over their pixels. They must rely on the citizens of the Internet—the netizens—to help navigate their way.

"But Ralph has a much more difficult time than Vanellope," says Moore. "Think of the arcade as a small town, and Ralph is

"We try to go for truthful emotions with our characters, even when they're being goofy. We want them to feel like people you know and can relate to."

a small-town guy. Now, suddenly he's in the big city and all he wants to do is return to his way of life back home. On the other hand, Vanellope, who is very adventuresome, falls in love with the 'big city' and wants to explore and experience it."

"Ralph and Vanellope are best friends," adds Johnston. "But Ralph has a tough time accepting Vanellope's enthusiasm about the Internet world. Ralph's positive feelings about himself depend on Vanellope's friendship. He feels that friendship is threatened, and he responds in typical Ralph fashion. What we love about Ralph is that he has flaws," Johnston adds. "He leads himself into trouble. Ralph is the kind of guy who likes to take a bull by the horns, but the bull usually wins."

NEW PLACE EQUALS A NEW STORY

The decision to take the characters into the new location was the key to finding their new story. "When we make a movie we want the ending to be as tight as it can be—with no questions left dangling," Moore explains. "Wreck-It Ralph (2012) had a very buttoned-up ending. So, it was hard to know where to start with a sequel."

"We were about a month into development when we realized 'we're just telling the same story,'" Johnston admits. "We wanted to match the tone and heart of the first film, but also make it a drastically different story so our characters would grow and evolve."

CREATING THE INTERNET WORLD

"Probably the biggest leap we made was realizing we had to expand Ralph and Vanellope's world," Johnston continues. "Where else would they go besides the Internet? That critical decision gave us an entirely new world to work with."

"First of all, what does the Internet look like?" Johnston asks. "It's so huge, so we created different districts and modes of transportation. We personified the sites that are on the Internet and made them feel like real places with characters and experiences we can relate to as humans. For example, eBay is a huge auction house with an auctioneer. And we created the netizens, who are the characters who live in the Internet and make it run for the users. It turned out to be a lot of fun."

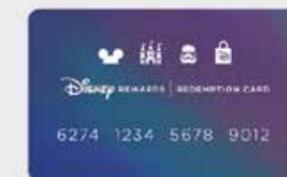

The change of location also gave the story the conflict it needed. Will the differences between Ralph and Vanellope's attitudes toward the new location allow their friendship to survive? That's the question audiences will be asking. "I think we've all experienced times when it seems as if important friends are going in a different direction," Moore says. "We all know what that feels like and ask ourselves 'can we be different and still be friends?' Ralph has to learn that you can have different dreams and still be best friends."

“The film’s basic theme is that strength comes from within—from inside you. I love that we are sharing that message, especially with young people, in a beautiful, magical way.”

—Mark Gordon, Producer

Join Clara on an Extraordinary Journey of Self-Discovery

In theaters November 2nd, The Nutcracker and the Four Realms goes beyond the ballet, the classic tale and the imagination.

The idea of adapting the long-treasured story, The Nutcracker, to a live-action feature film was intriguing. But, according to the film’s Producer, Mark Gordon, actually making it happen was another story—literally. “We drew upon the wonderful elements of the ballet and E.T.A. Hoffman’s classic story, incorporating Tchaikovsky’s music and the idea of the Realms. We also included a beautiful sequence featuring prima ballerina, Misty Copeland.”

Filmmakers wanted to pay homage to the tale audiences have seen portrayed on stage, but asked themselves, “what happens after the ballet?” So they created a robust story with complex characters, emotional depth, adventure and consequences. “Clara (Mackenzie Foy), our main character, is a bit lost,” says Gordon. “She’s grieving the loss of her mother and struggling to find where she fits in the world.”

When Clara receives a mysterious locked box from her late mother, she’s desperate to find the key, believing it will unlock the answers to all of her questions. To get the key, however, Clara must venture into a parallel world that’s both frightening and oddly fascinating. “Clara is intelligent and inventive,” says Gordon. “Her quest helps her gain confidence while finding herself along the way.”

Clara meets Phillip (Jayden Fowora-Knight), a soldier who introduces her to three stunning Realms and the peculiar regents who preside over them: Sugar Plum Fairy (Keira Knightley) oversees Land of Sweets, Shiver (Richard E. Grant) leads Land of Snowflakes and Hawthorn (Eugenio Derbez) heads up Land of Flowers. “But every story needs conflict,” Gordon explains. “And Clara’s adventure is filled with it.”

The story’s conflict is rooted in the Fourth Realm, a dark and ominous island that once thrived, but ongoing disputes left it barren, broken and teeming with an army of mice. Clara must face Mother Ginger (Helen Mirren), the tyrant who rules the lost land, if she wants to get her coveted key and bring peace to this troubled world. It’ll take courage, and Clara’s never considered herself particularly brave—until now. “As a parent, the message behind the story really resonates with me,” says Gordon. “There is imagination, creativity and sincerity. I’m so proud of this film.”

Practically Perfect in Every Way

The world’s most magical Nanny brings the gift of laughter, music and imagination to theaters December 19th.

“Mary Poppins takes us back to our childhood when the world seemed full of magic and anything seemed possible.”

—Marc Platt, Producer

Rough times have fallen upon 17 Cherry Tree Lane. It’s the middle of the Great Slump and now-grown siblings Jane Banks and Michael Banks, along with his three children, Annabel, John and George, are enduring their share of struggles. But help soon arrives—complete with carpet bag and parrot-head umbrella. The beloved nanny (Emily Blunt) has returned to rekindle the Banks family’s sense of joy and wonder in Disney’s Mary Poppins Returns.

“Mary Poppins is a fantastic character,” says Marc Platt, Producer. “Author PL Travers wrote eight wonderful books about her. We wanted to delve into them and bring our own contemporary sensibility, music and magic to telling more of her stories.”

“We not only drew upon the books for the new adventures, but also for new characters including Jack, the lamplighter, (Lin-Manuel Miranda) and Mary’s delightfully quirky cousin, Topsy (Meryl Streep).” All the actors, including Emily Blunt, studied the books to find clues about their characters. “Mary Poppins is NOT a sentimental character—she’s often described as a ‘no nonsense nanny,’” Platt says. “But there is warmth and nurturing under her façade, and Emily was able to communicate that essence beautifully.”

Among the many adventures Mary Poppins takes her young charges on is an enchanting underwater experience utilizing both traditional and new animation techniques. “It’s colorful, upbeat and full of humor—just what you’d expect from an adventure with Mary Poppins.” And, of course, music, song and dance run through the film like a rainbow. “Composer Marc Shaiman wrote the music for the film and was a student of the Sherman Brothers, the team who wrote the music and lyrics for the original film, Mary Poppins, in 1964. Shaiman has created a marvelous score that draws upon ideas and elements found in the PL Travers novels. And the songs, co-written by Scott Wittman and Marc Shaiman, will make you laugh and make you cry. They’ve done a tremendous job,” says Platt. When asked about any musical moments he particularly likes, Platt says, “I don’t have favorites, I love them all. Every number is fantastic in its own way. But, I will point out one musical number ‘Trip a Little Light Fantastic,’ an exuberant production number led by Jack, the lamplighter, that will enthrall audiences.”

“I remember seeing the classic film Mary Poppins when I was a child,” Platt continues. “It was an experience that has stayed with me all my life and I hope that Mary Poppins Returns will create those same kind of memories for a whole new generation of children and families.”

Give the family a holiday treat by taking them to see Mary Poppins Returns opening December 19th. Then use your Cardmember savings of 10% on select purchases at Disney store and shopDisney.com to bring home merchandise inspired by the film to create a musical, magical memory of your own.²

Be Immersed in the Story at Disney On Ice

New storytelling techniques bring Disney On Ice presents Mickey's Search Party to life like never before.

AN EXCITING NEW STORY

In Disney On Ice presents Mickey's Search Party, families embark on a search for clues along with the Disney On Ice skaters, acrobats and dozens of beloved Disney Characters to find Tinker Bell and stop the nefarious Captain Hook from his villainous plans to steal her magical wand. It's not only a compelling new story, it's being told in a whole new way with the latest in video projection technology and multi-level production numbers that take the performances beyond the ice to the aisles, the air and into the seats in ways guests have never experienced before.

BE PART OF THE ADVENTURE

"We're engaging and interacting with the audience in entirely new ways," says Gen Cleary, Creative Director, Disney On Ice presents Mickey's Search Party. "When we began developing the show, we asked ourselves 'how can the audience be more involved in the show?' One way we do that is by actually elevating more of the performances, so audiences won't just be looking down at the performers on the ice, but will also see high-flying acrobatics and aerial performances at their level. The other question we asked was 'how do we break the imaginary wall? That's the wall between the performers and the audience, so that instead of sitting and watching one story unfold after another, the audience is actually part of the adventure. Guests may find a clue beneath their chairs or have an unexpected close-up encounter with a Disney Character. They'll be invited to participate in games, charades,

—Gen Cleary, Creative Director,
Disney On Ice presents Mickey's Search Party

singing and dancing. Each time we transition to another world, the transformation is triggered by the audience. They're involved in moving the adventure along," Cleary explains.

STUNNING EFFECTS

"Guests will feel the story happening all around them," says Cleary. You will join Miguel from Disney•Pixar's Coco in the magnificent spirit realm. Queen Elsa's ice castle from Disney's Frozen rises from the ground and ice harvesters inspire gasps as they use extreme skating to launch themselves from mountainous slopes. Belle and the enchanted objects from Disney's Beauty and the Beast twirl toward the ceiling on aerial silks as the iconic chandelier becomes a rotating carousel rising above the arena. And watch the tattoos on demi-god, Maui, from Disney's Moana, come to life within the video projection to dance with him.

MOMENTS OF WONDER

"This was a new mission for me," Cleary says. "Sometimes when you're working with new technology, it's tempting to want to try it all, but we didn't want to overshadow the incredible skating and the amazing acrobatics. The new projection technology affected a lot of our choices. For instance, the set design is very different. There are over 170 costumes in the show, and every color and fabric had to work with the projection colors. The choreography also had to interact with whatever is being projected. The technology is important, but above all we need to highlight the performers. We want everything to work together organically so that it happens magically on the ice and around the audience. Our job is to create moments of wonder. It's going to be a really different experience!"

SHARING A VISION

"Having a chance to be surrounded by the Disney Characters and stories and the legacy of Disney On Ice shows has been phenomenal," Cleary concludes. "I love to promote creativity and help people find it in themselves. I believe everyone at Disney On Ice shares the same vision—to create memories that last a lifetime. And maybe, plant the seed of creativity in others."
